

Elements in an MLA Citation (leave out any information that does not apply to your source)

Author (if there is one: last name, first name), “Title of source” (article or item title if there is one, in quotes). Title of container (book, journal, newspaper, website, etc. title, in italics), Other contributors (like editors or illustrators – though not necessary especially if there is an author), Version (usually only available for periodicals like journals and newspapers), Number (same, usually available for periodicals), Publisher *(found on copyright page of book or at the bottom of webpage, see notes below* for abbreviations and when to leave out)*, Publication date, Location (if citing full book/more than one section of book, do not include page numbers; if citing section, article, etc. include page numbers; for online sources, this is where the URL goes).

General Notes:

Some sources will have two Containers, this is common when accessing sources from online databases like JSTOR (see Database Example below) and Netflix.

Best practice: Start your research with databases; the citations are done for you (and you can frequently export the citation to a NoodleTools project that can then create a Work Cited page). And because a computer is generating citations on a database, be sure to do a quick check of all citations created for you – rearrange info as needed and omit anything not necessary.

* Publisher notes: MLA recommends some abbreviations → Omit words such as company, corporation, incorporated, and limited → Abbreviate University to U and Press to P (University of Texas Press > U of Texas P).

There are some times you will leave the publisher out of your citation → Do not include publishers for periodicals → If name of a website is nearly identical to the name of publisher, only list website's title.
